PRAYER FOCUS

In today's society, blended families are commonplace both inside and outside of the church. Because two families have come together to form one blended family, they have come from different households with different rules, traditions and ways of doing things. As with any family, the strength of the marriage unit will determine the strength of the whole family. One or both spouses will have hurt from previous relationships. Children often carry pain and hurt from the divorce or death of a parent. The key to helping a blended family overcome these challenges and thrive through cooperation, patience, and communication is the power of Jesus.

PRAYER POINTS

- the Lord would be the center of the home and marriage.
- that husbands of blended families would manage their families well and raise the children in a way that fosters honor and respect.
- that wives of blended families would live modestly and in submission, and train the children to love and care for others.
- that all members of the blended family would receive emotional healing.
- that the household would be structured and maintain an atmosphere of love, peace, and unity.
- that children would feel accepted and secure in the love of both parents.
- that the parents would love the children from both sides equally.
- that the church would be equipped to support the spiritual and emotional needs of the family.
